Grandview volunteers live to give

Hospital honors volunteers during Volunteer Appreciation Week

JASPER, TN – Grandview Medical Center honored its growing volunteer corps during National Volunteer Appreciation week in April.

At Grandview, volunteers perform many duties such as greeting visitors, providing information, staffing the gift shop, assisting patients as they leave the hospital, helping provide school health screenings, and many other tasks. The duties performed by volunteers allow nurses, technicians and other staff members to use that additional time caring for patients, said Jamie Lawson, Director of Marketing and Volunteer Services at Grandview.

“Our volunteers are among the most giving, compassionate people you’ll find anywhere,” said Lawson said. “These ladies and gentlemen have given hundreds of hours of service to help make this hospital and this community a better place. We honor them during Volunteer Appreciation Week, but we appreciate them each and every day.”
